

By the 1st of March (or by arrangement) the Chair Psychology of Work (Prof. Dr. Theo Wehner, ETH Zurich) and the Division Public and Organizational Health (PD Dr. Georg Bauer, University/ETH Zurich) are offering a

PhD Position

The central aim of the project „Volunteering as a psychosocial resource concerning work-life balance and health“ supported by the Swiss National Science Foundation is to investigate whether and how volunteering is associated with the balance between different life domains as well as with health and well-being in general.

Your responsibilities within this project will include the preparation and development of the measuring tool, the recruitment of the participants, the data gathering and analyses, and the dissemination of the findings (conferences contributions, scientific articles). Besides you will be actively involved in a research group which investigates work, society, health, and organizational change. Moreover, you will have the opportunity to participate in the PhD program Health@Work which is supported by the Swiss National Science Foundation.

Requirements:

- Masters degree in social sciences (preferred: Psychology or Sociology)
- Pronounced interest and ideally basic knowledge in the field of work, society and health
- Experiences in planning and implementing empirical research (and publishing)
- Knowledge of quantitative research methods
- Proficient English language skills
- Team spirit
- Initiative, independence, flexibility

We offer:

- Challenging tasks rich in variety
- Broad insight in an applied research field
- Integration in an engaged, interdisciplinary research team

We are looking forward to your application.

Please address your application at PD Dr. Oliver Hämmig, ohaemmig@ethz.ch until the 19th of February 2011.

Further information:

Dr. Rebecca Brauchli +41-44-6344972 (rbrauchli@ethz.ch)

Or visit our websites:

www.volunteering.ethz.ch, www.poh.ethz.ch, and www.pda.ethz.ch.